Bars of Three Cells in Raymond Street Jail Cut When Warden Got "Tip."

When Mrs. Stella Moore is arraigned before Magistrate Handy in the Adams street court, Brooklyn, this afternoon, she has to explain her connection with what is now believed to have been a plot for a wholesale freeing of prisoners at Raymond street jail, including possibly the murder of the four night keepers.

Mrs. Moore is a slim and pretty woman of twenty-two years, a telephone operator living at No. 216 East Seventh street, Manhattan. The police say she is the wife of Harry Moscovitz, alias Moore, who is serving a year on Blackwell's Island for burglary, whom she left for Harry Miller, the young burglar in Raymond street jail to whom, it is charged, she carried saws and nails.

Warden Thomas F. Kane learned yesterday that a plan to escape was afoot and ordered an examination of all cells. When a bar in the door of cell No. 7 was struck with a hammer it did not ring. It was then found that two of the bars had been sawed nearly through.

They were at the bottom of the door. Very little force would have been required to shove them out of place and leave a space 3 by 15 inches, through which a man of medium size could pass easily. The doors of cells Nos. 6 and 8 had been treated similarly.

Cell No. 7 was that of Charles Loehr, twenty years, awaiting trial for burglary. No. 6 was that of George Becker, also indicted for burglary. No. 8 was occupied by Miller, who is nineteen and already convicted of having robbed Nelson Lewis's house at No. 1071 Albemarle road, Flatbush. Miller is to be sentenced next Monday. A search of his cell revealed in the washbasin a small bottle of hydrochloric acid and a piece of a saw.

WOMAN CARRIED A SAW IN HER SHOE.

The three alleged burglars were placed in the cells and the visitors' book was examined. It showed that upon nearly every visiting day for two weeks Mrs. Stella Moore had called on Miller and that Loehr's wife and his cousin, May Hartnett of No. 111 Starr street, Brooklyn, had visited Loehr frequently.

Warden Kane was sure that one of these visitors had brought in the saw and saw.

It was visiting day and soon Mrs. Moore arrived. She was taken to a side room and the matron, Mrs. Catherine Slavin, searched her. The young woman laughed and joked as the search went on. "Take off your shoes," said the matron finally. The young woman's manner changed.

"I have something in my shoe for a purpose of my own," she said. The matron pulled off the shoe. It held a short saw, broken in two by the pressure of the young woman's foot.

Commissioner of Correction Patrick A. Whitney arrived with his secretary, Frank Connor. When the Moore woman was taken back to the Warden's office Connor recognized her. She had been frequently to his office for passes to visit her husband on Blackwell's Island. She had also visited prisoners in the Tombs.

She denied stoutly that she had taken the acid and the saw to Miller. She did say that a visitor to the prison had told her the other day that he had taken something in "to let the boys out."

In the Adams street Court Magistrate Handy held the Moore woman in $2,000 for examination to-day. She was sent back to Raymond street and placed in a cell.

BELIEVE PLOT INCLUDED MURDER OF KEEPERS.

Commissioner Whitney and Warden Kane believe that the plan of the trio included the murder of the four night keepers to get possession of their revolvers and keys. The cut sections of bars would have made good weapons with which to knock men unconscious. There was no other way, they say, in which the prisoners could have got away.

Last night Miller had to be guarded, as he threatened to kill himself. There have been two escapes from Raymond street jail since it was built. On New Year's night, 1906, a prisoner got away by simply walking out the door without being questioned by the doorman.

Warden Kane learned yesterday that a plan to escape was afoot and ordered an examination of all cells.

When a bar in the door of cell No. 7 was struck with a hammer it did not ring. It was then found that two of the bars had been sawed nearly through.

They were at the bottom of the door. Very little force would have been required to shove them out of place and leave a space 3 by 15 inches, through which a man of medium size could pass easily. The doors of cells Nos. 6 and 8 had been treated similarly.

THIS IS THE OWNER OF ROSA, DOLL BITTEN BY A WICKED SHARK.

MARTELLA WILSON AND HER BROTHER JOHN

SHARK SNIPPED A PIECE OUT OF POOR ROSA'S FACE

She Was Swimming Alongside of the Ship at the End of a String.

A sad-faced little girl with dark eyes and curly hair slowly followed her mother off the steamship Hortenguen, arriving from Matanzas, yesterday afternoon. In her arms was a broken doll, upon which she kept a watchful eye and occasionally spoke to in childlike fashion as "Rosa."

"Come, Martella," urged the child's mother, "Aunt Jennie will be waiting for us on the pier. Besides, dearie, we must show 'Rosa' the big city before it gets too dark. You know, this is Rosa's first visit to papa's old home."

Martella paid little or no attention to this, but kept her eyes fixed upon the doll. Those who saw the child thought they observed some traces of tears.

"Yes," said the mother, Mrs. Fred Wilson, whose husband has been in charge of a plantation in the tropics for the past six years. "Martella is very much grieved because a shark chewed off half of poor 'Rosa's' face on the way up from Matanzas."

"Martella," she added, "is very fond of Rosa. It is the first real doll she ever saw, and naturally she is greatly upset because the shark disfigured it."

Mrs. Wilson then told of the party given in Rosa's honor last Christmas. All of Martella's little playmates (most Cuban children) were there, and it wasn't long before Rosa was the most talked of doll for miles around.

"Martella remembers what a grand time we had, don't you, dearie?" said Mrs. Wilson. "Rosa was the nicest doll Santa Claus brought to Matanzas, and if it hadn't been for that nasty old shark everybody in New York would be admiring 'Rosa'."

Martella began to cry as if her little heart would break.

HOPES TO FIND THE DOLL'S SISTER IN NEW YORK.

"Never mind, dearie," said Mrs. Wilson, "maybe we will find 'Rosa's' sister here."

The child's face brightened instantly. "Do you think Santa Claus will let us take the sister back with us, mamma?" asked Martella, breaking her silence for the first time.

"Why, of course he will," replied Mrs. Wilson, smiling.

"But I won't have to give up 'Rosa'."

Many Double-Breasted Models
In This Distinguished Display of Fall Clothes for Men

A broadening of public favor for the double-breasted coat is noticed.

Its becomingness, especially for men of rangy build, has long been conceded.

You will be struck by the wide representation, in this Gimbel Clothing stock, of suits with double-breasted coats—in a graceful new style, that is as different from the usual chunky sort as chalk is from cheese.

This liberal provision of double-breasted suits does not affect the fine variety of single-breasted suits—it merely amplifies it.

Gimbel tailors—the pick of their profession in America—have produced some remarkably fine clothing for us this season; much of it in designs of our own working out, which possess all the tone of clothing that is made to order.

Add to that the choice of some very unusual materials and you have Clothing for instant service, with a character that is both distinctive and well bred.

Suits for Autumn wear, $15 to $45.

"No, mamma," continued the child. "No, well, take what's left of poor 'Rosa' back, too."

They hurried off the pier, after their baggage had been passed upon by the customs authorities, and one of the other passengers told of how 'Rosa' came to grief.

Little Martella, he said, had tied some twine about the doll's neck and was playfully dangling it in the water from the taffrail of the ship a couple of days ago, when the shark grabbed at it.

Martella quickly pulled in the twine, and found to her astonishment that a big hole had been gnawed out of the doll's face. It was impossible after that to pacify Martella.

HOSPITAL IN WATERSHED.
New York May Fight Plans for Tuberculosis Sanatorium at Yorktown.

(Special to The Evening World.)

MOUNT VERNON, Sept. 20.—Notices were posted to-day that Dr. Eugene H. Porter, State Commissioner of Health, will hold a public hearing at White Plains Oct. 17 on application of the Westchester County Board of Supervisors for permission to construct a county tuberculosis hospital on the site of the George J. Griffen farm of 277 acres at Yorktown.

The supervisors request that the site be approved and that consent be granted for the establishment of a hospital there, to cost $250,000.

There is a possibility that the City of New York may object to the selection of this site for a consumptive hospital, as it is said to be in the watershed district. It is also stated that property owners in the vicinity of the farm are going to fight against the consumptive hospital, as they claim it will be a detriment to other land and cause a drop in realty values.

Dropped Dead in Home.
Rudolph Marx, thirty-two years old, of No. 392 Morris avenue, Richmond Hill, Queens, smoked a cigarette while breakfast was being prepared to-day. When called to the table he dropped to the floor. Dr. C. J. Stark of Manhattan said that death was due to apoplexy.
